INALIENABLE RIGHTS

Inalienable rights are rights given to each, spiritually moral and living rational being, as a basis and foundation by the Supreme Source of All Being, which cannot be taken away, withdrawn, restricted or curtailed by anyone or anything, at any time or place, except by the Supreme Source of All Being itself. These rights are something true and derivable from the nature of reality, truth, and not manmade. These rights are universal, binding, fundamental and unchangeable. They are not negotiable, changeable, diminishable, removable, restrictable, divisible, alienable, assignable, discardable, or giveable. They are also not subordinable to any community, group, collective or general good. These inalienable rights given as a basis are always valid, everywhere, at any time and on any level of being, eternally. They ARE.

These inalienable rights always apply unless they violate the inalienable rights of another living, spiritually moral being of reason.

1) Right to bodily integrity.

Integrity of the body of any kind, without interference hereupon, which includes free unrestricted breathing and the rejection of any interference hereupon and the complete and unrestricted dominion of disposal, ownership and self-determination over one's body and its image and components of all levels. The complete and non-negotiable right of ownership and power of disposal over one's own genetics in all forms of DNA/DNA and energetic signature.

2) Right to freedom

The right to spiritual, mental and physical freedom. Freedom of belief, thought, to free will, free opinion and free expression of these, right to privacy in all forms. Right and ownership of all data and information, concerning the living, spiritual moral being of reason. The informational self determination, freedom of truth and knowledge, right to free development, the right to develop mentally and spiritually. Freedom of travel and the freedom to choose one's place of residence and settlement. The right to work/occupation/activity and to be fairly compensated for it. The right to freely enter into contracts or not. Freedom from manipulation and influence. Freedom and right not to be subject to coercion, pressure, extortion, threats, discrimination, disadvantage, or abuse. Freedom from exploitation, abuse, overreaching, robbery, fraud, mental or physical violence, or from collective coercion. The unrestricted right to property and possession, of his goods, values and creations of any kind created by physical and mental force, and the power to dispose of them and the inviolability thereof. Freedom to assemble, gather with like-minded people and the right to unrestricted freedom of movement.

3) Right to security

Right to shelter/home, safety, protection, peace, love, joy, harmony, honor, dignity, sovereignty. Direct or indirect coercion to involuntary or forced servitude, servitude or slavery, assaults on the material body and attached bodies, soul or spirit are completely prohibited. The inviolability of the domicile in which the living, spiritually moral being of reason has settled. Security of maternity and paternity and offspring, in any form without encroachment and the free decision-making power of mother and father over the descendants.

4) Right to health

The right to absolute spiritual, mental and bodily (as well as all bodies bound to the material body of various levels). The right to nature, water, food and air, in the quality intended by the Supreme Source of All Being, without manipulation of the energy surrounding us to the detriment of the Earth and the beings living on it. The non-negotiable freedom of self-determination over the substances and components that are applied to and introduced into the body/flesh.

5) Right to Justice, Dignity and Free Development

Everyone has the right to be heard, the right to freedom from prejudice, the right to equal treatment - no one is subject to me and I am subject to no one. No spiritually moral being of reason can be forced to act against his conscience, thus no being may be punished because he/she follows his/her conscience and his/her values. The right to give oneself one's own name, to express one's free will and to live one's individuality. The right to disclosure of all facts and documents in disputes before a court of law and the right to an impartial and unbiased judge. The right to the pure, unadulterated and unmanipulated and complete truth and knowledge. The right in community of free sovereigns to form a free and independent court subject to the highest moral values and principles.

Any disregard and diminution of these inalienable rights, means the violation of the divine cosmic laws, from the Supreme Source of All Being. For this, it has given to every part of itself, which we are, and to no one except it, it belongs and its, with it accompanying and tied up values and from it emerging creations of every kind.

Identification of the points, the inalienable rights, which were violated in concise, but clear words of a case limited to the essentials. Please send a copy of any available evidence.
